

Keio University Summer School at University of Washington

"HUMAN SYSTEMS IN THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST BIOREGION"

Keio University would like to welcome 5 students from the member universities to further promote student mobility among APRU universities. Please see below for more information about the program and application procedures.

The Human Systems in the Pacific Northwest Bioregion Program for Keio University students at the University of Washington (UW) has been created through collaboration between the University of Washington (UW) Program on the Environment (PoE) and International Outreach Programs (IOP) in consultation with Keio University. It is an intensive three-week course on environmentology designed to introduce students from a wide range of academic and professional interests to issues and challenges encountered in an urban area with plentiful natural resources. The program includes lectures, workshops, discussion, as well as a visit to the UW Friday Harbour Lab Research Facilities on the San Juan Islands for seminars and hands-on experiences.
